Last Lecture paper

The Last Lecture speech by Randy Pausch was very heartening. In the video he discussed life, dreams, and lessons that he has learned about. One of the things that affected me the most about his lecture was, when he was talking about learning from failures. I think personally that one way that I improve myself and my work ethic is when I fail at something and am able to work around it. It helps improve my work ethics, but it also improves my personal growth. Another thing that affected me the most was to grow as a person, you need to help others and appreciate people.

I identified with a lot of Pausch's messages. Pausch brings up the concept of head fake, which I do agree with. Conceptually, we usually don't think about how practicing one thing can lead to many life lessons, and Pausch goes over this. Overall, I do agree and identify with Pausch's messages that he discussed in the Last Lecture.
